Having trouble remembering what your teenager looks like? Maybe it's time to reign in their busy schedules and preserve a little family time. With all the activities available to kids these days it's easy for families to lose touch. Kids are so busy with after school activities and social events that many families can't remember the last time they sat down for a meal all together. But family times are important to a child's development, and as parents, it's our job to see that they get scheduled. Why not pick one night of the week as a regular family night? Put away any distractions like phones, TV and computer and use the time to relax and reconnect. Try going camping or a picnic together on weekends. Or maybe you could just set up chairs in the backyard and look for shooting stars or satellites. Do whatever it takes to get family time together, uninterrupted and well connected. Your kids are grown and gone sooner than you think, and you will never get that time back. I know, our last bird leaves the nest this Saturday!!

These are the stick insects that are pets in Mr Murphy's class. Here are Grade 1/2 learning about the stick insects life cycle.
