Raising Purpose-Driven Teens

So what do teenagers want out of life? Well, the same things you and I want: love, acceptance, and purpose. Too often parents forget that teenagers aren't big kids, they're becoming young adults. And they're struggling daily through this tough transition between childhood and adulthood. Teens who get involved in drugs, sex, alcohol, and other damaging patterns of behaviour aren't looking for trouble, they're looking for love and affirmation. And whether they know it or not, they're seeking something to commit their lives to. If you want to affect the life of a teenager, you begin by stepping into their world and letting them know you care. Be the role model that they need and love them for who they are, not who you think they should be. Growing happy teens isn't that difficult. They need love. They need acceptance. And they need family.

Focus on the Family
