HOPE

Christians look forward with hope to the joy of being with Christ in glory forever. Faith is defined as "the assurance of things hoped for" (Heb. 11:1) because the invisible things hoped for in the future are grasped through faith. Hope is certain; it is "a sure and steadfast anchor of the soul." According to the Bible, Christ is "our hope," and our God is called "the God of hope."

An ethic of hope pervades the New Testament. It is an ethic of pilgrimage for strangers on their way home. It is an ethic of preparedness, since we should be ready to leave this world at any time. Hope calls us to be patient. Hope gives strength and confidence for running the race, fighting the good fight, and enduring the tribulations that continue in this life.

Though the Christian life is marked more by suffering than by triumph, our hope is sure and our mood should be free from despair.
